Autism Matters Series Disclaimer

The educational material presented during the Autism Matters Series is for general educational information purposes only and is solely the opinion of the author, presenter and instructor, Kim Barthel, OTR. The series is not intended to provide personalized medical or therapeutic advice. It is left to the discretion and judgment of each participant, indeed it is the sole responsibility of each participant, to determine what is necessary for his/her own practice. If you are a parent, family member or caregiver of a child or client with Autism Spectrum Disorder, remember that the information is generic and not specific to meet the needs of individuals. Be certain to seek professional support and/or medical consultation to ensure that any ideas and suggestions presented are appropriate for your individual child/client.

Neither Kim Barthel nor her company Relationship Matters can be held responsible for the material, opinions, or any inadvertent errors or omissions in the preparation or presentation of the material. Further, nothing in the material should be construed as a claim regarding any procedure, protocol, therapy, test, or product. This series does not 'diagnose' any medical condition.

Relationship Matters does not have any financial affiliation with the profit or non-for-profit organizations mentioned in Autism Matters. Any of the products or approaches discussed in the series are presented based upon the experience of the speaker without conflict-of-interest. The sole product discussed in the series from which there would be potential monetary benefit to Kim Barthel or Relationship Matters is the book Conversations with a Rattlesnake: Raw and Honest Reflections on Healing and Trauma, co-written by Theo Fleury and Kim Barthel. There are intermittent references to the book throughout the series.

Photos and videos within the Autism Matters Series are purchased or have creative common licensure and are used with permission.
